Khoa Phan
CS290

My attempt at the open weather API was both successful and unsuccessful. I was able to gain information using the previous assignment with getting information from OWM, but had a hard time trying to understand and organize how to work with it using multiple cities. This is challenging as I still have had a more difficult time trying to understand the requests that must be made, maybe something that limits them will allow me to work with the integrity of my list.

During this session, I wanted to have a list that will be sent by the client that will then update the session with more current results. This way, I the list can be more active. Again, controlling the requests was difficult for me to understand at the current moment. Using the examples as a base, I was able to request the correct data and link the views from the get and post data assignments. Creating the session was simple but organization was a lot to manage all at once. I plan to spend more time reviewing this topic.